

HISTORIC GENEROSITY

A family's gift will make a difference for generations to come.

Every family has had important conversations at the dinner table, but this one literally was historic.

Reid Buerger sat down with his wife, Krista, his parents, Connie and Alan, and his brother, Grant, to suggest that they should give away a fortune to help CHOP build a revolutionary new medical facility.

The Buerger family, living in the Philly suburbs, had been longtime supporters of CHOP and had made big gifts before to several charities, but what they were considering was much larger. At $50 million, it would ultimately be the largest gift in CHOP's history.

ABOVE: The street-level entrance to the Buerger Center will be covered by a glass canopy.